

Monthly Review

The fund was managed with a tactical attitude, as our market-timing models suggest probable performance discontinuities in major markets throughout the year. The structural equity exposure of the fund currently ranges from 10% to 20% of the NAV, and we should maintain that prudent stance in the short term.

If the trade war will not escalate badly and no recession materializes in G7 countries - as we deem as probable - the final part of 2019 will likely be positive, and favour the equity component of the portfolio. According to that, we will be looking to add equity risk in the final part of the year.

The reference market for our allocation (equity and fixed income) remains the US, but we are now trying to create alpha by focusing more on idiosyncratic risk, rather than rely on sectorial or geographical allocation. Incidentally, we also invested in spreads like baskets vs indexes following opportunistic strategies. On the currency side, we have reduced the dollar exposure to around 3%-5% of the NAV in the 1.1140-1.1240 area (down from former 13-18% exposure), and took some short position on GBP due to the likely "Brexit with minimal agreement" scenario.
