

Monthly Review

The Fund continues being under-exposed on the Emerging Markets asset class, as we still consider EM unattractive in light of the risk of a global slowdown in 2019-2020. The only exception is China, Brazil and recently Turkey, where we are equal or small under-weight vs benchmark. The trade tensions between the USA and China are still on the way, and based on recent developments we are increasingly of the opinion that a resolution before the US 2020 elections is all but taken for granted. China reinstated its policy of opening to foreign capital inflows and tried to reply to the US with tax levies on imported goods, two signs that they don't want to settle at every cost with the US and, on the other hand, they start thinking to be a viable alternative to world capital investments for the long-run. Central Bankers are now in the cut mode and that is helping risky assets. Worries are now on a possible economic global slowdown for the months to come, possibly a global recession well into 2020. Our base scenario is that global equities will remain well supported up until the end of 2019 by a mix of still decent global growth and by monetary stimulus, while we are becoming very cautious for the first 6 months of 2020 when a series of negative factors (mainly a pronounced global slowdown, prolonged trade tensions, the US elections) could result in deep corrections. The fund portfolio remains balanced in terms of Value and Growth stocks.
